HOUSEHOLD

COOKERY FOR INVALIDS.—For natives make a large quantity of they seldom require much salt, and is desirable that variety be pro-them.

Always have something in re-little beef-tea, nicely made and nice-the most agreeable of iced, etc., and may be administered as soon as the invalid wishes for it. If obliged long time, the patient loses the desire and often turns against the food brought to him or her.

In feeding the invalid, be prepared invalids, let everything look as possible. Have a clean cloth laid over the tray; let the spoons, tumblers and saucers, etc., be very clean and bright. Let the food about a sick the patient, and so on.

to's time. To let him, take it away, and bring it to the table an hour or two's time. To leave the food untouched by his side, from the moment the meal, in hopes that he will eat it at a certain interval, is simply to prevent him from eating any food at all. Let the food come at the right time, and be taken away, when he has eaten, at the right time, but nevertheless have "something always standing by" for him, if you don't wish to disgust him by anything.

Never serve beef-tea or broth with the smallest particle of fat or grease on it.

place. It is better, after making the fire, to get the water when all the fat may be then warm up as much as may be.
Two or three pieces of clean white paper laid on the broth, will prevent the fat from floating up, the grease will cling to the sides.

Roast mutton, chickens, rabbit, game, fish (simply dressed), puddings, are all light food and very palatable, but these things partaken of, especially the patient suffering.

A mutton-chop, nicely cut, broiled to a turn is a dish to be recommended. A small piece of with all the fat at the end, nor too thickly cut. Let it be cooked free from smoke, and sent up very hot. A small fry of Nothing is more disagreeable to than smoked food.

In making toast and water, never the bread, but toast it only a little. The water should be at the moment it is required, as it can be properly prepared—at least, it will be obliged to drink it warm, saying but agreeable.

be just set; if boiled hard, they will disagree with the patient.

THE BEST WAY TO SOAK CLOTHES
Rhudy Bacon has some money. She is an ancient maiden, and her information as an egg is of moment that she passed through the city's red-light district was preparing her clothes to be soaked in hot water, and she could not refrain from conversing with her upon this subject.

"If you bile the clothes in bill," she said, "you are sure to get a grizzle." Aunt Rhudy had washed clothes for nearly sixty years. I'm old enough to know what 'washin' put. Them clothes inter be washed in hot water for twenty minutes, no 'till vented to dry, and then you can thank me for tellin' you yer doin' it let me tell yer another thing: yer clothes stick ter the lines if yer don't wash 'em in hot water 'em right where the clothes-pin is, and they'll kum off just as easy as tear at all. I've seen good old sheets, an pillow-cases, torn inter shreds by the time they've been with frost. So Aunt Rhudy has

FIREBIRD AMUSEMENTS.—Elect* Two pounds of sugar rubbed together produce instant flashes of light and a great amount of brilliant appearance in visible.

Acid and Alkali.—Put a lump in a glass of vinegar, and the effect will be the neutralizing of the acid and the action of acid and alkali contact.

To put an Egg in a small net- ting. This is very impossible as formerly follows:—Put a lump of vinegar; in about twelve hours it become soft, so that it may be lengthwise without breaking, and then cut the neck of a bottle, be-cold water, with some soda dissolved upon it when in the bottle, it will
